FOUR CORNERS

Mnemosyne sought stories in every part of the four far flung corner of the world (of Greece, that is). All in the service of your task: Bend the paper's corners backwards. Angles on the back (which align with corners) bear important information. Copy curves and lines to make, from the fragments, a sentence of four small words. That's your hole card. Good luck!

In her younger years, Mnemosyne gaddled about aimlessly, collecting tales. But when she got older she buckled down and got serious: she invented writing, she presided over one of the local oracular caves, and she gave birth to the nine muses.

Compared to the extreme productivity of her later years, how did Mnemosyne describe her youth?
(and, coincidentally, your evening)
