

CAFETERIA CAMARADERIE

Olivia who was obsessed with Rubik's cubes and never put hers down, had just broken up with Gabriel, so they sat as far apart from each other as possible. Meanwhile, Olivia had picked up Osman on the rebound, and now they were inseparable.

Looking up from her South Dakota travel brochure, Salma notices, "Hey, if I were Washington, Carmen, you'd be Jefferson, Olivia would be Lincoln, and Hannah, you'd be some guy with little glasses and a big moustache."

Hugh, Isaac and Carmen were studying for their geometry test, and Hugh noticed rather obtusely that the three of them formed an isosceles triangle. LaKasha made the acute observation: "If I joined you, then we would form a trapezoid – or a trapezium as everyone outside North America calls it!"

LaKasha was practicing her new German vocab words: "Salma sitzt mir direkt gegenüber."

Hector, who was working on a poem for his English class, remarked that if he and the four students sitting to his left were the five lines of a limerick, then Isaac and Salma would rhyme with him.
