

During the reception, Pat and Chris had time to reflect on some significant people and products from their favorite decade – the eighties! Strange how one topic of conversation can be twisted into another...

Pat, do you remember Sixx, Lee, Mars and Neil (1)? I think they all went on to other projects that were a pirates mean plaything (8).

Chris, do you remember that evening show guy(2)? He was a geek among night-time television (2).

Pat, do you remember the material girl, but what was her full name (3)? I think that she is a singular, cold performer (6).

Chris, do you remember “The Demon” from that one popular band (4)? I believe he writes one giant tune (9).

Pat, do you remember our 41st president (5)? When asked what his son was doing for a living around the turn of the century, he replied this (7).

Chris, do you remember the iron lady (6)? I like to call her the big smooth talker (1).

Pat, do you remember the Gipper (7)? I think of him as a singular, chilled, white aggressor (4).

Chris, do you remember that first PC? The one with the graphical interface, not that silly command line business (8). I consider it apparatuses likely to aid (3).

Pat, do you remember the Duchess of Cornwall (9)? Too bad her untimely demise can be described as this (5).

Chris, do you remember that guy with the E Street Band (10)? I think he’s a scoundrel who transports melodies (10).
