

STAB BATS!

But there was no reflection of him in the mirror!

—Jonathan Harker

Used to be you could rely on a mirror to help you separate vampires from run-of-the-mill human oddballs with suspicious-sounding names. Not anymore! The Count's pet scientists have just invented a device that projects a fake reflection. It's not perfect—there's always something missing from the false image. Knowing this, examine these profiles of suspected vampires to identify the real ones and find out what they drink when they can't get blood.

Pyotr likes to think he is pretty chill and can just go with the flow. Don't upset him, though—he keeps a pet wolf.

Spike, an avid fan of opera, once got to go backstage after a performance of Der Vampyr, where he presented a bouquet of pink roses to the diva.

Edward used to drink wine to excess and nearly destroyed his liver. Now he never drinks... wine... but instead gets his jollies from living a life of evil.

Varney lives in a vast house with a wrought iron gate. Claiming a fading memory, he insists that all guests wear an ID tag.

Esme likes to do weird acts on a dare. Although she admits that "weird" means something other than what it used to in this very unusual era.

Lestat always seems to be exhausted, especially during the day, and over the span of just a few hours has been known to take multiple naps.

Carmilla keeps a number of lovers, whom she controls by promising them treats from the reward drawer.

Damon finds that whenever he gets stressed by life's hardships he is able to feel better again by baking a raspberry pie or another of his specialty desserts.

Sophie-Anne keeps a messy house and must root around in piles of junk, looking for items she needs. She's a messy eater, too.

Angelus, a chemist, does not allow silver in his lab, but can tell you the average mass, to the closest atomic mass unit, of an atom of tin.

Elijah lives in San Francisco and often takes a tram past the market on his way to his job as a night guard at the gallery of contemporary art.

David stays up late watching and rewatching the new Netflix show about a Dracula-themed video game, Castlevania. His favourite character is Alucard.

MIRROR MAZE

*It is a foul bauble of man's vanity.
